

MUSIC and DRAMATIC ART

Edited for The Tulsa World by Ora Lightner Frost, Mus. B.

Historians have been unable to give us much authentic information of the music of primitive man, although we know they had some expressions of their musical emotions, for explorers have found in the buried cities of Egypt, western Asia and Greece pictorial representations on tombstones, monuments, papyrus and houses which tell us that the primitive man had their drums, flutes and other instruments. The primitive man, however, had a combination of little wood tubes, such as those known by the name of "Paris Pipes," were used by them.

We do not often think of China—that country that is so long ago, but they have preserved ancient literature which shows how early the Chinese developed the science of music. We are told that in 227 B. C. there were twenty-two writers on music, 23 on ancient music, and 25 on the construction of the scale. Confucius, the great Chinese philosopher, wrote about ancient music in 246 B. C., but these records were destroyed by the emperor then on the throne, who destroyed all literature in the libraries excepting works on medicine, agriculture and divine rights. Records show that the Chinese were writing learned works on the science of music when Pharaoh was building the pyramids.

There is a story of a progressive Chinese inventor who reigned three thousand years before Christ, and that he was anxious to develop music to a higher plane. At this time they had not discovered tone. There were all sorts of sounds—but these were not tone. So this wise emperor commissioned a musician of the royal court to go out in quest of one and he was not to return until he had found it. After years of unsuccessful searching this musician grew tired and gave up the search, but he dared not return to the emperor—so he went to the sacred river to commit suicide. As he sat on the bank he picked up a broken bamboo reed and blew into it—and from that reed came a vibrating tone. He at once knew he had found that for which he had searched so long, and after working a long time he returned to the emperor with five broken bamboo reeds of different lengths—thus giving to the Chinese people their first-toned scale—the first scale ever discovered. This scale corresponds in pitch to the five black keys on our piano.

Metropolitan Singers Interested in Tulsa Grand Opera

It was our privilege to meet Henri Scott of the Metropolitan Opera company in Chicago, where he was singing in opera at Madison park this summer. Mr. Scott was much interested in "Tulsa" and the opera scene here. He is to enjoy, and expressed keen disappointment that he had not been one of the chosen artists to tour the west. He said, "You have a wonderfully chosen artist cast, and your city will have two wonderful performances."

The "community sing" is fast becoming "quite the thing" throughout the country. All the large cities are having these community singings, once and twice each week, and great interest is manifested. We are proud to say Tulsa has been in the front ranks for some time. Two such gatherings were held in Convention hall the past season. Let's have some more.

At an evening party the hostess had on a protesting guest to sing. "Oh, Mr. Jenkins," she said, "you must never tell me again you can't sing—I know now!"—Musical American.

"Don't you think Miss Howler has wonderful control of her voice?" "No, I don't. She sings everything anyone asks her."—Boston Transcript.
